Coral Reef Ecosystem Importance

Thriving coral reef ecosystems, effectively managed to protect their ecological, social, and economic value for future generations. (AIC vision)

- The AIC jurisdictions are home to much of our nation's shallow-water tropical coral reefs.
- Coral reefs are critically important to the jurisdictions and FAS
- Provide economic, cultural, and ecological services to millions of people as valuable areas of natural beauty, cultural significance, sources of food, jobs and revenues, recreation and tourism, shoreline protection, and much more

Background

The islands and the AIC are an integral part of the history of coral reef conservation in the U.S. and helped to create much of what guides coral reef conservation today.

- 1994: U.S. announced International Coral Reef Initiative & U.S. Pacific Islands workshop held to develop the 1st regional Coral Reef Initiative Work Plan. AIC members involved.
- 1996: AIC was established.
- 1998: EO 13089 / USCRTF formed – AIC recognized as a key element of the overall U.S. Coral Reef Initiative
- 2000: Coral Reef Conservation Act

How does the AIC work?

Decision-making is via Consensus of voting members.

Guided by...
AIC Charter      Strategic Plan
AIC Communications Plan

**Consensus is fundamental agreement and does not have to be unanimous.*

AIC and the Task Force

The USCRTF provides the invaluable opportunity for jurisdiction and federal managers to interact at a national level.

Opportunities:

- Convey and discuss AIC priority issues
- Conduit for federal agencies to reach all 7 jurisdictions and FAS
- Share information, views
- Portal for partnership and collaboration

AIC jurisdictions = Governors

FAS = Principals / POCs

AIC Overarching Priorities

- Achievable and shared resource-focused outcomes
- Integrated and strengthened federal-local partnership
